Farm News.....

It is sometimes stated incorrectly that "lime and phosphates will kill out broom sedge," says P. H. DeHart, assistant state executive officer, AAA, and adds that it would be more nearly correct to say that lime and phosphates restore the fertility of the soil to a point where grass and legumes can grow.

Pastures that have become reduced in carrying capacity because of broom sedge, running briars, hawkweed, plantains and other weeds are rank, can economically be improved by the use of lime and phosphates, DeHart says. Field tests have shown repeatedly that where lime and phosphates are used on run-down pastures, the broom sedge gradually disappears and, if other good pasture management practices, such as reasonably heavy grazing, are followed, the grass rapidly improves.

The crowding-out effect of the grass and legumes, and the increased grazing that livestock will give to palatable grass, gradually reduce the weeds. In addition to the good practice of using lime and phosphate and proper grazing, it is sometimes advisable to clip the tops midge in August.

In general, pasture land is steep, and as soon as the sod becomes poor, washing of the surface soil takes place. Most of the erosion on pastures is due to the lack of sufficient plant food in the soil to sustain a good sod. The best and only practical way to stop this is to replenish a sod of grass and clover. DeHart maintains that the only way to do this is to return to the soil the lime and phosphate that have been removed. Fertilizer replacement must be done, however, before it is too late, for if much of the surface soil is removed by erosion, it is very difficult to bring back a good sod without considerable extra expense.

In the livestock sections of the state, where pasture is by far the most important crop, DeHart advocates more attention to the proper management of pastures if herds and flocks are to be maintained economically.

FRONT ROYAL BOOMS!

Front Royal, located at the northern end of the Skyline Drive in Northern Virginia, will find itself by 1942 with a population of 25,000, ten times its present size as recorded in the lastcensus, according to a survey of the rayon industry in the United States, made by Dr. Caroline Ware of the American University, Washington. Principal cause of the phenomenal growth, the survey points out, is the construction of a huge factory by the Viscose Corporation, which soon will begin operation and eventually employ some 5,000 workers.

Tobacco Prices

(By VPA)

Richmond, Aug. 2.- With opening prices on Georgia markets under an 18-cent average, W. Stures Holt, sales supervisor for the South Boston tobacco market and for many years a keen observer of tobacco conditions, is advising Old Belt growers to feel no uneasiness over the situation. Holt has stated that the Georgia farmers sell their tobacco loose, not tying it as the farmers of the Old Belt do, which naturally makes it more expensive for the trade to handle. Too, he contends that with the Federal wage-hour regulations in effect, it makes the handling of the tobacco unsatisfactory, putting the processor at a distinct disadvantage in not being able to employ the same volume of labor as in the past. He said the prices in the Georgia markets do not reflect the prices to be expected in the Old Belt, provided the quality is good.
